BATTLE RAGING ALONG MUCH OF ODER RIVER LINE

mounted savage counter-attacks to keep the Reds from overrunning the one-tenth of the province still in German hands. Pillau, a port at the entrance to Kienigsberg lagoon, was under artillery fire and the Samland Peninsula north and west of the provincial capital was being mopped up.

Fierce Battle Expected

The fiercest battles of all, however, were anticipated on the Oder line.

The key German defense cities of Frankfurt-Am-Oder and Kustrin already were outflanked and the Russians seized the town of Zellin, only 32 miles from the Reich capital.

A late DNB transmission admitted the loss of the key city of Steinau, 34 miles northwest of Breslau on the Oder.

Berlin radio commentators said the Russians had fought their way across the Oder river in the vicinity of Kienitz, 11 miles to the northwest of Kustrin where the Soviets were within 35 miles of the German capital.

(A Stockholm dispatch said the Russians had fought their way to the western bank of the Oder at its confluence with the Warthe river.)

Crossing Not Confirmed

The Soviet communiqué, which did not confirm the Oder crossings, gave a vivid picture of the bitter fighting along the German frontier, more than 5,000 German officers and men were killed in a single day of fighting and another 1,360 were captured.

The official Soviet communiqué disclosed that Marshal Khukov's forces had seized the German stronghold of Alt-Schaumburg (three kilometers (1.8 miles) northwest of Kustrin and also had driven the Germans out of Goeritz, slightly more than six miles south of Kustrin.

Still other Russian comments forced their way into the Oder river town of Neumuhl some three miles south of Goeritz.

To Isolate Territory

The Russians also were revealed by Moscow to have jabbed their way into the town of Stargard, some 30 miles from the Oder river estuary port of Stettin on the Baltic coast, where the red army was losing a gap to isolate almost 14,000 square miles of territory in northeastern territory from the rest of the Reich.

Unconfirmed reports previously placed the Russians within less than 10 miles of Stettin.

In East Prussia

In East Prussia, where the Germans at least reports were holding less than one-tenth of the province, the Russians were declared in the Moscow communiqué to have intensified their attack against trapped Nazi troops northwest of Koenigsberg, on the Samland peninsula where the enemy was fighting a desperate last-ditch battle.

The Germans launched a savage counter-attack in an attempt to break out of their pocket which was beaten back by the Soviets who annihilated a Nazi regiment and captured more than 1,600 enemy officers and men.

In Budapest the Russians occupied 14 more blocks of buildings and compressed the Nazis into a small hilly area in the western portion of the capital where they were under direct fire from red army artillery.

The American Legion national charter was granted by congress in 1919.

LIGHT JAP RESISTANCE IN DEFENDING MANILA MAY INDICATE PLIGHT

same effect was put into record by Maj. Gen. Robert L. Eichelberger, commander of the American Eighth Army, who remarked, "those Jap generals must have gone crazy. Where in hell are they going to fight anyway? Even since Gen. MacArthur's original landing on Lingayen bay, American forces have crossed line after line of powerful defensive positions, meeting only resistance by local civilians. There are believed to be two Japanese armies totaling in the neighborhood of 200,000 troops on Luzon, but what they are doing and where they intend to meet the Americans in a win-or-die battle remains a mystery.

Causes Speculation

This lack of decisive Jap action ashore or afloat at the present very decisive stage of the war is giving rise in Allied military and naval circles to speculation to the effect that American attrition war may have cut down Japanese fighting power to a considerably greater extent than has been believed generally. Unquestionably our planes and ships have been inflicting great losses on Japanese convoys carrying transports and especially tankers. These, all-important vessels, plying between the old fields of the Dutch East Indies and the Japanese homeland, have been specially preferred targets of our day's submarines. There is a widespread feeling that perhaps Japanese losses of shipping and cargoes is having a greater effect than of late has been calculated as probable.

Attrition War

This is, in a way, a swing back to naval theories of a generation ago, when leading world authorities were pretty generally in agreement that a war between the United States and Japan would be an attrition war, with the United States cutting the communications of the Mikado's empire and bringing about its collapse because of shortages of all the necessary materials without which modern war cannot be waged. Of late this point of view has been pretty heavily discounted, but as of today a number of authorities are beginning to wonder if after all it may not be possible to defeat Japan by the old methods of supply-strangulation.

Statements and opinions herein are private to the writer and are not to be construed as reflecting the views of the navy department.

According to the local weather observer, January cold and snow established new records here. Another new record was also established for shoveling snow on the part of householders who attempted to keep the sidewalks cleared of snow. It might also be mentioned in passing.

10. In other words if the melted accumulation was equal to one-tenth of an inch, it was figured that an inch of snow had fallen. This has proven untrue this winter, and the method has been revised to multiply the depth of the melted snow by 15, giving in this way an inch and a half of snow for each tenth of inch of precipitation. In colder weather, when the snow is thicker, as it has been this month, this method is more nearly correct. With a heavy wet snow falling just at the freezing point, the former method would be more correct.

In spite of the fact that the temperature, in shaded spots did not get above 31 degrees, yesterday, where the sun hit, the snow melted off at a great rate, and water ran in the gutters of many streets. In spots where the sun struck against buildings, and was reflected onto the ground, the snow was found to be bare this morning. This was noted on the grounds of Jameson Memorial hospital.

underway and were expected to continue for "some time yet." Many areas of the metropolis offer ideal hiding points, and small groups of Japs were expected to adopt guerrilla tactics, particularly since there is no escape for them from the city.

Enemy Forces Sealed Up

Sealing up of the enemy forces inside the proud old capital was effected when units of the 11th Airborne division of the U. S. Eighth army stabbed into the southern section of the city to close a giant noose, the upper arm of which was formed by the First Cavalry and 37th division troops already inside the city.

In reaching and entering Manila, the Eighth army units of Lieut. Gen. Robert Eichelberger's command culminated a sweep from landing points around Nasugbu in Bataan province. Moving sometimes better than two miles an hour, the Yanks spearheaded by other paratroopers who seized Taal, a rocky ridge in their first airborne invasion of the Philippines, swept below the mammoth Cavite Naval Base to strike the rear of Jap forces massed south of the Pasig river.

North of this stream, meanwhile, units of the famed First Cavalry and equally renowned 37th Infantry already had gained control of the northern half of the city in fighting which at times reached the house-to-house and room-to-room variety.

Liberate 1,350 More

In the drive into Manila from the south, the Eighth army forces captured notorious Bilidid prison. There they liberated 800 prisoners of war and some 550 civilian internees, including many women and children.

With this liberation, the Yanks brought to better than 5,000 the total of prisoners wrested from the Japs inside Manila. Some 3,700 others were freed on Saturday when the First Cavalry seized the Santo Tomas concentration camp. Another 511 men—veterans of Bataan, Corregidor and Singapore—were given their freedom after three years of unbelievable hardships, when Rangers raided the infamous Cabanatuan camp.

Approximately 4,000 of the persons rescued in Manila were identified officially as Americans, while the remainder were British, Australian and other Allied nationalities.

Inside the city, meantime, two main bridges across the Pasig river continued to be battlegrounds with the Americans holding one side of the spans while Japs at the other approached sought frantically to demolish the structures before the Yanks could get across.

no suggestion of where the meeting is taking place.

Washington, Feb. 6.—(INS)—The White House today declined to confirm London reports that President Roosevelt is out of the country and is attending a conference with Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin.

Asked to confirm an announcement in London by Sir Walter Citrine, general secretary of the British Trades Union Congress, that a meeting of the big three "is taking place this very moment," Jonathan Daniels, administrative assistant to the president, said he could not comment.

Daniels said that Citrine "has no official post in the British government."

"I understand his status is similar to that of William Green in this country," Daniels said. Green is president of the AFL.

Extra Thousands Spent Annually

Every mother and housewife will be interested to know that the Keystone Bakery spends extra thousands and thousands of Dollars annually to enrich Keystone Bread with Vitamins and Minerals to the very highest standards set by the United States Government. This means a great deal because the highest standard of enrichment is over 50% greater than the minimum requirement.

First Bread To Be Enriched

Ever since the Government began its National Program of Preparedness for Better Health, it has advocated the improvement of the nutritional value of food. Because bread is eaten three times a day, it was the first food item to be enriched with extra Vitamins and Minerals, which greatly enhanced its energy-building qualities. From time to time the Government raised the standards of enrichment, and Keystone Bread has always been enriched with extra Vitamins and Minerals to the highest levels recommended by the Government. Laboratory tests prove that Keystone Bread contains more Vitamin B1, more Vitamin B2, more Nicotin, and more Iron than any other bread sold in the community. Adv.
